Darkness Between Doorways

A Channeled Message on Shadow Consciousness and Dimensional Thresholds (October 24, 1999)

OVERVIEW

This 48-minute message explores the threshold spaces between dimensions—the 'darkness between doorways.' The beings explain how consciousness transitions between realms and the nature of shadow entities that inhabit liminal spaces.

CORE CONCEPTS

Liminal Spaces: Between each dimension exists a threshold space—darkness or void-like areas where consciousness transitions.

Shadow Entities: Certain consciousness exists primarily in threshold spaces—neither fully integrated in any dimension.

Confused Consciousnesses: Beings trapped in liminal spaces are usually confused, traumatized, or resistant to progression.

Transition Difficulty: Movement between dimensions requires courage as one must pass through darkness/void.

Guides in Darkness: Advanced beings assist confused consciousnesses navigating threshold spaces.

Lost Souls: Some consciousnesses choose to remain in liminal spaces rather than progress or integrate.

Doorways and Access: 'Doorways' represent access points allowing dimensional transition—some are guarded, some open.

Courage Requirement: Progression requires willingness to pass through darkness toward light of next dimension.

Shadow Self Integration: The darkness contains fragments of self not yet integrated—moving through requires accepting shadow.

Fear as Primary Obstacle: Fear of darkness prevents progression; courage and trust dissolve the barrier.

KEY TAKEAWAY

Dimensional transitions require passage through threshold spaces—inner darkness representing unknowns and unintegrated shadow. Some consciousness becomes stuck in these liminal spaces, confused and afraid. Progression requires courage to move through darkness toward light. Guides assist those willing to move forward. The darkness between doorways is temporary passage, not permanent residence—fear makes it seem more formidable than it is.
